

As a former transportation manager and superintendent for a Louisiana Parish School Board, I can attest to the fact that Edulog has a product that is powerful and capable of handling any transportation problem a system will encounter. Much of what is written about Edulog focuses on tangible cost savings, and it can certainly do that, especially when it comes to re-routing a school district or an area. However, its first real benefit comes from the fact that the massive amounts of data needed to effectively run a system on a daily basis can be manipulated and disseminated easily and quickly to those in need. I can also see GPS applications growing by leaps and bounds as the safety of children becomes a bigger issue. The intangibles concerning data distribution down to the lowest level and everyday solutions to common problems are equally as important as any financial savings.
